Sustainable Energy Initiatives in Lexington - 2017

The dangers of climate change are all around us and there is an immediate need to develop new energy sources as part of a healthy and sustainable environment. Come hear what is going on in Lexington to address this need and what we, as citizens can do about it.

Join us on Friday, February 3, 2017 to hear an overview of Sustainable Lexington's programs that will increase residents' access to renewable energy, improve the performance of our homes, schools and municipal buildings while reducing our energy costs; and a program to reduce our building's emissions to zero over the next 25 years. Learn about the following programs taking place in Lexington in 2017 including the Lexington Energy Challenge, Community Choice Aggregation, Net-Zero Emissions Community and the Sustainable Building Policy.

Learn how you can take advantage of these opportunities and help ensure each of these programs is a success.

The program will be held in the Large Meeting Room at Cary Memorial Library, 1874 Massachusetts Avenue. This is the fifth in the series of 2016-2017 First Friday Forums hosted by the League of Women Voters of Lexington to promote awareness and understanding of public policy issues. League Sends Memo to U.S. Senate Regarding Supreme Court Nominee (NEW) ★

The League sent a memo to the U.S. Senate about the most recent nominee to the Supreme Court. The memo outlines three questions that the League would like the nominee to answer during the confirmation process. The next Supreme Court Justice will play a major role in setting the course for American Democracy over the coming decades.

 To: Members of the U.S. Senate
 From: Chris Carson, President
 Re: Three Questions for the Supreme Court Nominee
 Date: February 1, 2017

The Supreme Court nominee President Trump announced this week will play a major role in setting the course for American democracy over the coming decades. That may seem like an exaggeration, but the Supreme Court is currently divided four to four on most major issues. The incoming justice will ultimately be the deciding vote on crucial issues that shape the direction of our system of government and our country.

The League of Women Voters believes that any Supreme Court nominee should share his or her views on fundamental issues. We have three questions for a nominee:

1. Must the Executive Branch obey court orders from the federal judicial system? Our system of checks and balances is the basic tenet of a free democracy. To prevent authoritarianism, the Founders made sure that no one branch of the government could dominate the others. But in recent days, it appears that the Executive Branch is challenging that system by refusing to obey federal court orders limiting President Trump's anti-immigration policies. The Supreme Court nominee must take a stand, one way or the other, on the role of federal courts in our system of government.
2. What is the appropriate role for voting rights in our democracy? Our nation was founded on a belief that voters should be in charge of our government rather than government being in charge of the voters. However imperfect at the beginning, citizen voting rights have grown through constitutional amendments to include women, racial and ethnic minorities and young people. But we are seeing efforts to roll back voting rights, with laws designed to make it more difficult for people to exercise their right to vote. The Supreme Court nominee should let the American people know his or position, whether voting rights enforcement is a vital component of our representative democracy or if the nominee thinks limitations can be justified under our Constitution.
3. Is big money in politics a fundamental part of our electoral system, or can limits sometimes be justified? Some believe that corporations, unions, organizations and individuals should be able to spend unlimited amounts of money to influence elections, and to do so secretly. Others see this as an existential threat to our democracy. The Supreme Court nominee should state his beliefs related to the influence of money in our elections.
